

The Head Office
of Customs and Excise
London

Dear Sir

it is about time that something was done about the way the Skippers mates and chiefs of the Melford trawlers take these bottles of whisky rum and brandy home - off the trawlers they spend there time in dock drinking and rowing with there wives some men like the skipper of the Piston Scalion last week on the first-night in dock got very drunk in dock on Bond whisky, and then rowed his wife and set the room on fire she had to call the Police in to deal with him - if you could visit-his home you would find lots of bond spirits in the front room at the back of the Piano also all the skippers mates and chiefs off all the travelers does this its time they paid duty on their drink like everybody else then they wouldnt drink so much they all got bad spints in there homes

Its no good you telling John Lee the Customs man to do anything all hell do is tip the men off, he always do, because they share with him and he turns a blind eye - but warns the men when strange Customs men come to Milford. But they all get it at home - and its not right -
